ABOUT THE PROGRAM

Children or teenagers are often referred to psychotherapy because they are suffering from anxiety, depression, eating disorders, addictive behaviours or engage in self harm, internalizing and externalizing disorders, school refusal... just to name a few.

Child & adolescent psychoanalytic psychotherapy is a way to treat the emotional distress of children and adolescents by exploring their mental representations or inner world and the underlying conflicts that are contributing to their struggles. The aim is to increase the child's ability to manage their feelings, relationships and conflicts, allowing them to put their experiences into words instead of acting on them, leading to positive changes in behaviour and development.

This series will offer an introduction in child and adolescent modern psychoanalytic psychotherapy. The application of modern psychoanalytic concepts and technique will be illustrated using clinical material and highlighting the 3 age groups: infant & toddlers, latency and adolescence and work with parents.

This series will be of importance to professionals who are interested in understanding and learning about how psychoanalytic psychotherapists work with children and adolescents and the benefits of therapy. We invite participants to think together with us and bring your questions and examples to discuss so we can learn from our and your experience.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

1. Be introduced to modern trends in psychoanalytic child psychotherapy;
2. Gain an understanding of what occurs within the treatment between child and therapist;
3. Learn how change occurs in psychoanalytic child psychotherapy.
